

CAN WE TAKE ON NORWAY IN THE ELECTRIC VEHICLE STAKES?

Meridian thinks we can. But are we in competition with Norway or in deep admiration? There's a lot to be envious about Norway. From high happiness stats, a huge sovereign wealth fund, and social equality, to the highest number of electric vehicles on the roads per capita. What are the lessons from the Norway model of sustainable development, including renewable energy and incentivising electric vehicles, that we can learn from and make our own?
